

I work for a rural Internet Service Provider in West Tennessee. There are several telcos in this area that simply do not support dial-up internet service due to the limited bandwidth of the telephone cables. By law, telco's are required to only supply speech services. With the proliferation of internet use, I believe all telco's should be required to provide telephone lines capable of internet use; i.e., higher bandwidth for dial-up service.